They are often the most over-looked part of a worship service, but without well-trained sound technicians taking care of the audio equipment even the best preacher is hindered. With so much riding on our message, it's amazing that a church can neglect this important area. The "How-to Sound Workshop" run by Fits and Starts Productions meets this need in a creative and informative manner. Our sound techs at First Free are a mix of novices and veterans, but each came away with new skills and terrific insights that they could put into use the very next Sunday.

Hector, Mike and Jeremiah don't give some stale dry lecture but rather cover a full range of topics needed for sound technicians. Drawing on their years of work both with churches and in "show business," the "How to Sound" team combines technical insight with wry humor and wonderful stories. What's even better is that they take time to cover issues that individual churches may have with their sound systems.

I would urge you to give these valuable ministers in your church a treat and send them to the next "How-to Sound Workshop" in your area. It will be an investment that will give you positive returns for years to come!
